Q: Why and when do I need a setState? I am reading Flutter's official guide on State Management and I have a question. It says: If you don't have a setState() call within a State class, you shouldn't call the build() method or setState() within any other class. Why is that?

Well, I don't quite understand it. As far as I know, setState() call only makes changes to the state of the widgets. But then it seems that we shouldn't even call the build() method in the first place, because if we do that, setState() will be called and we will have to be sure that any changes I did will be updated on the UI. So in short, what setState() does is it updates the widgets on the UI in a specific way. But what does that tell me? That I don't need to update my widgets with setState()? Am I missing something? A: The setState will trigger the widget's build method and all the logic inside the build method. Here is how I understand it: If I just update the internal state value in build method, there will be no update on the screen. If I call setState inside build, there will be a build method update the state and then a build method update the display. In build method, you can do whatever you want to do. For example, you can use platform or other APIs to change the display inside build method. Update: Here is another example. Imagine there are two widgets, one is Text(string) and the other is WidgetsBindingObserver. Text is just a simple text widget, which will not trigger the build event and the WidgetsBindingObserver will trigger the build and do all the job. In the above case, you can do something like this: class MyClass { Text myText; void setup() { WidgetsBindingObs
