I am testing the Apache jk connector to serve multiple traffic to backend server. I put Apache jk connector as httpd's front connection like: SetHandler jk://localhost:8090 JkWorkers And backend server's proxy.ini like: [proxy-http] EnableSendfile=true FileETag=* MaxUploadSize=1MB Header unset ETag Header unset Vary I need to open/close connection for new request's connections in backend server. I test this by access "" I expected to see "Access-Control-Allow-Origin" if open connection in backend server, but I don't. If I test with Firefox, I could get "Access-Control-Allow-Origin" in response. What is the way to open/close connection in the backend server? A: you have to configure your backend server first - I mean, you have to load/configure the file which contains the setting about AllowedOrigins The AllowedOrigin directive allows incoming requests which would normally be denied. This block is evaluated in conjunction with the header Access-Control-Allow-Origin. This directive is a string-match filter. When a request has a header containing the header Origin, the AllowedOrigin directive blocks the request if the request does not match one of the values specified within the directive. Specified Values You
