The address space is where the application keeps files that are recently opened, files that are used by other applications and the Desktop itself. The advantages for the operating system are as follows: * Avoid creating unnecessary files on your hard drive by moving files to the Trash as you need them. * File creation and name changes (rename) are done in the background without the need for the user to wait while the file is created or moved. * Multiple files and folders can be moved at once which speeds up the process. * When you save a file, it can be moved to the Trash or copied to another location in a matter of seconds without interrupting the task you are currently performing. * The usage of the hard drive is fast and enables your system to be more responsive to user actions. * The files are organized in such a way that they are easy to navigate. This is especially important for application settings and plugins. * The files are easily backed up by copying them to an external hard drive or another Mac. * The files are organized in such a way that they are easier to access using the Finder and the Launchpad. * The files are organized in such a way that they are easier to organize using the Expose feature in Mac OS X 10.7 Lion.
