Alright, here's the problem. I have a 2d game that I am about to start working on. I have a campaign, at the moment it's about 4 chapters long (The final length is about 15 chapters). However, I'm having some trouble figuring out if I will need to use P3D or not. Here's what I'm wondering. I'm assuming it's much easier to make my game without the P3D engine, but that doesn't mean I couldn't use it, only that it may be easier. I am not fluent in GLSL/OpenGL/C++/C# so I could be making stupid mistakes or doing something stupid. I guess what I'm basically asking is, is P3D still the way to go or can I use something else without having to overhaul my entire engine? Also, are there some particular features or aspects of P3D that people would suggest that you absolutely must be careful with when making a game? I'd suggest to use OpenGL unless you have a very good reason not to. You can't make a mistake with OpenGL, it's a part of the platform of OpenGL and it's difficult to make mistakes in OpenGL code. OpenGL is also not limited by the hardware, you can implement the most possible features on any graphics hardware, except on
