Does this mean I am a wolf only, or also a ? A: A participle is the subject of the verb being described. As verb, participle it is the whole or part of the verb. In English language, a participle is an adjective or a noun formed from a verb by modifying it. Examples "a noun formed from a verb", "a verb formed from a noun" Parts of speech: noun, verb adjective, verb Examples of these parts of speech a coffee a mother (motherly) Examples of adjectives, participles "the mother", "the young" A: You're a wolf only. A: There are several things to consider. The first is that the participle in "a wolf" is the only part of the word "wolf". That is, the whole noun phrase is "a wolf", so you might be better off saying "I am a wolf" rather than "I am a wolf." The second thing is that by default in English there are two genders: masculine and feminine.
