I have a young daughter and a son in grade school. I feel a strong need to teach them to use their minds and to learn to think for themselves, which is the only way I have found to live in this world. I value learning for its own sake, so I have taken courses in many subjects. As a parent, I am teaching them to play and to think. My first job was as an EMT for fire and rescue. After twelve years I became a firefighter, and found that my work and my love of helping people was a happy marriage. When the FDNY promoted me to be the fire marshall, I was more than willing to take the job. My responsibility was to keep the world safe from fire, and I did it well. When I was elected to the State Assembly in 1990, I stayed on as the fire marshall until 2000. As fire marshall, I went into after-hours fire prevention. In addition, I was assigned to the budget and was responsible for fire inspection on the city payroll. By 2001 I was ready to start my own business, and I decided to do a little

More specifically I want to capture the value returned by this method, here is my jquery: $(function() { $.ajax({ url: '', type: "get", dataType: "text", success: function(res) { console.log(res); } }); }); I called the method directly on the controller and everything works fine: def some_method #dummy code return "some value" end However when I use it on rails it just returns false def some_method #dummy code return "some value" end UPDATE: For whoever is interested, this is the solution that worked for me. $(function() { $.ajax({ url: '', type: "get", dataType: "text", success: function(res) { console.log(res); } }); }); A: Rails response includes the redirect_to value. You need to follow redirects and get a response from the target url, your server should redirect that to the desired response. def some_method #dummy code 09e8f5149f
