Kidnapped the Wrong Sister Library: The best book free download â22A stunning prospect: Candidate Elizabeth Warren arrives to debate a neighbor's problems with an IRS audit. But instead of solving her neighbor's problems, Warren makes it worse. (Photo by Stephen Crowley/The New York Times/Redux) By Aubrey H. Weibe, New York Times Opinion When times are tough, Americans ask one another to do for them. But Elizabeth Warren is asking the American people to do for her. She's asking the American people to do for her the same thing that the rich and powerful have done for decades: help her climb the ladder of success. Warren's gambit might be the best explanation yet for why President Obama lost the vote in 2012. In the face of an economy mired in long-term stagnation, a tight fiscal situation and serious uncertainty about the future, Americans didn't want a president who kept bothering them with details, and tried to run the country. They wanted a president with a plan. People wanted someone who could spell out how he or she would solve their problems, someone who they could see in the mirror. This is why it is so remarkable that Warren has clambered to the top of the polls and has the money, the staff, the machine, and the media resources to keep at it. No matter what issue is on the table — even when it's her own relative lack of qualifications — Warren stands in the way and says: "I'm the answer." In her debate with Scott Brown, Warren argued that Harvard doesn't want to hire her because of her ethnicity. In her comments on financial regulation, she proposed a plan that could provide the nation's banks with $2 trillion dollars. This kind of thing is not exactly her strong suit. But after she was called out for her vague plan to break up the big banks — a plan that offers no path to reining in Wall Street excesses — she came out with a new plan. This time, it offers more detail, and cuts at least three competitors: JPMorgan Chase, the world's largest bank; Goldman Sachs, the world's best-paid investment bank; and Citigroup, the largest U.S. bank in Europe, which holds the distinction of being the only bank this century to have made money from the U.S. government.
