We agree with the district court that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that the hospital was negligent in accepting the RVM and in failing to immediately notify Dr. Clemens, the attending physician. 22 We also agree with the district court that Dr. Clemens's negligence, including his failure to properly treat Mr. and Mrs. Berquist's bedsores, and the hospital's negligence in accepting the RVM but not notifying Dr. Clemens, was a substantial contributing cause of the remaining scarring and pain. The jury could reasonably have found, as the district court did, that had Mrs. Berquist been properly treated, she would have suffered less scarring and pain. 23 On appeal, the Berquests also argue that the evidence of the remaining scarring was insufficient, and that the district court erred in denying their motion for a new trial. We find no merit in either argument. 24 Finally, the Berquests argue that the district court erred in giving a judgment n.o.v. to Bethleham and Dr. Fisher because of the lack of a 09e8f5149f

I have tried passing it in several ways in my code: CurrentViewModel; it.CurrentValue.Categories[0].Name; but all of them produced the same error: DataBinding: 'System.Collections.Generic.IEnumerable' does not contain a definition for 'Name' and no extension method 'Name' accepting a first argument of type 'System.Collections.Generic.IEnumerable' could be found (are you missing a using directive or an assembly reference? What should I do to pass the data to View? Code inside the View: ViewModel: public IEnumerable Categories{ get; set; } public int CurrentGroup { get; set; } //Some other code... public class Categories { public int ID{ get; set; } public string Name { get; set; } } } And finally, I have tried to use a DataTrigger like this:
