Q: Can I set a default size for a in a when the container is dynamic? In this code, both containers are optional and can be empty or have text: some text If both are empty, I don't want text to be set as a default, so I think it would be good to have a default size for the container-b if it doesn't exist. This way I don't have to write container-b{}, it just helps me to not have to write container-b{} when there is no content inside the container. Is there a way to do this? A: You can put conditional logic in a class selector on the container. Note that this isn't as clean of an approach as a solution that pulls all the attribute value information from the inner element (the) since there's a lot of situations where the inner div will not be present. some text .container { font-size: 20px; display: inline-block; width: 100px; border: 1px solid; } .container-a,.container-b { width: 100px; } .container-b:empty { font-size: 14px; } Winthrop Electric Winthrop Electric is one of several United States companies that produce the Winthrop brand of household cleaners. History The company was founded in 1921 in Rockland, Maine, by a local businessman, Robert H. Winthrop. Winthrop offered his first product, an electric dryer, in 1922. In 1927 Winthrop opened a second facility in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and added a line of coal-oil and gas-fired "new home" appliances. In 1930 Winthrop opened a plant in Montreal, Quebec, Canada, and began exporting household products to the United States. By the mid-1970s Winthrop had become one of the largest producers of
