Wordlist Wpa 2 Algeria For the majority of WPA/WPA2 encryption, the password is simply a passphrase based on a dictionary of 20 to 50 words (according to WPA docs). The dictionary attack allows us to attempt to guess a password by selecting a word from the dictionary, one by one. This attack is particularly convenient because of the dictionary file we need to download: it's a file with a list of all the 20 to 50 words, sorted by the first letter of each word, and with the words given a number (the part before the colon is the first letter, and the part after the colon is the number). The first time you run Ollydbg, the Ollydbg Wordlist Manager will present you with a default list, which should cover the same format as the file already included in the download (you can always download the file from our Dropbox account). Because there are only a few words in the default file, you might need to type all the words in the file to get all the words, so the next time you run Ollydbg, you can use the continue command to select the file and Ollydbg will begin searching for the words in the file. After that, you can use continue to select each word in turn, and type the letters you see in the blue window into the password field. If you run out of letters after typing about 10 to 20 words, you have to use the dictionary command. This will search the system for any password dictionary files you have installed, and will open the one that matches the format of the wordlist already in use. The filename should include the name of the file containing the dictionary, and the dictionary filename should include the name of the wordlist being used. Because there are only a few words in the default file, you might need to use the all command a few times to get all the words, so the next time you run Ollydbg, you can use the continue command to select the file and Ollydbg will begin searching for the words in the file. After that, you can use continue to select each word in turn, and d0c515b9f4
