Ou copier le fichier rldorigin.dll dans le chemin est le plus souvent: pour Windows 95/98/Me - C:WindowsSystem Conventionally, there is a game system that, when a player and an opponent are connected via a communication network, allows the player and the opponent to compete in a match game in real time via a communication network. Specifically, in some examples of the game system, an opponent is provided with an opponent character that the opponent manipulates, and when the player has a score that is higher than that of the opponent, the opponent may manipulate the opponent character to gain a point by playing an offensive or a defensive movement and so on. However, in the game system described above, even when a score of the player is higher than that of the opponent, it is impossible to correspond to the state in which the player and the opponent are easily matched with each other in the game and it is also impossible to increase the score of the player beyond a predetermined score.
